

Seneca School Supports Katrina Disaster

Seneca School put together a pancake feed Sept. 24, 2005 to support the Hurricane Katrina relief effort. Andrea Officer of Seneca School had the idea, and the seventh- and eighth-grade helped set up and serve the meals. The school made $440. They made most of the money during the three hours that they were serving the pancakes. Some donations were given from some of the people who did not make it to the pancake feed. Jack and Teresa Southworth, and Andrea and Jim Officer helped cook the pancakes served that day. Lindsey Sachs cooked the ham and then donated it. Andrea Combs ran the money box, Sierra Elliott, Amanda Branstetter, Connor Smith, Jordan Walker and Briana Murphy-Johnston helped serve the pancakes, ham, juice, and applesauce. Jake Combs, Luke Hamner, Jake Reynolds and Brianna Murphy-Johnston helped set up for the feed the day before. The students of Seneca School thought that this was a good idea to help the victims of Hurricane Katrina because we felt that this fund-raiser would give us an opportunity to give back what this hurricane has taken away from many families. All of our sympathy goes out to the hurricane Katrina victims. We hope that this helps and we're praying for you all as well. — Sierra Elliott, eighth grade and Amanda Branstetter, seventh grade
